Personality

Personality is the only reality that we cognize and which we simultaneously cultivate from within. Emmanuel Mounier. There are many people in the world, and everyone is different. Some people are born with a love of conversation and like to share new things, some people like to stay at home and enjoy loneliness and silence, and like to be alone. Character is an interesting and complicated part of personality that characterizes person like a unique individual.

People are also divided into two types. The first type is extroverts. These people can get energy through socializing. The other type is the introvert. Instead, they are more relaxed when they are alone, and too much socialization can cause them to lose energy. In my opinion, extroverts are generally open-minded, easy-going and friendly. They are good at problem solving through communication, and for them working with other people makes them happy. Introverts are usually quiet, thoughtful, and like to focus on one thing. They are the exact opposite of extroverts, who are good at solving problems alone. They value personal thoughts more than communication. A person's character can also be judged by a person's appearance: his hairstyle, clothing style, behavior, musical taste, and more. But there is an old saying in China: "A person can't look at his appearance". Appearance can be deceptive sometimes. For example, a person who looks like an actor is likely to be a programmer. Different professions have different type requirements. Introverts are generally creative, and programmers, artists, and researchers are more suitable for them. Extroverts are more open, they can better show themselves in front of others, they are suitable for the work of actors, teachers and waiters.

How to tell if someone is introverted or extroverted? I think some simple personality tests can help us. In testing, a person must, without much hesitation, agree or disagree with a short statement. At the end, using mathematical calculations, a "personality profile" is built, which shows which personality traits are pronounced, and which are standard, like in the majority.

Charisma can be characterized as the ability to attract attention to oneself. People with this ability can usually control a large number of people. Attractive people are more likely to influence others and lead them. Charisma , so to speak, is kind of synonymous with leadership.

For example, Desmond Doss, he was an excellent medic. For example, Desmond Doss, he was an excellent medic. He is also a devout believer. Doss in the Battle of Okinawa by saving 75 men without carrying any weapons. As a result, his popularity in the army was very high, and everyone was inspired by his charisma. Even everyone would wait until he finished praying before going into battle. "God may not be able to take me home, but Doss can."

In the end, I want to say that life is all about having individuality, because of individuality, it is different; because of individuality, it is extraordinary; because of individuality, it is wonderful! Character determines destiny. Destiny and character are interdependent, a good character can create a brilliant life and create a bright future. Each person is a unique individual and there is no good or bad between people. With perseverance, everyone will discover their worth sooner or later. "Gold will shine wherever it is buried!"
